Fair play for GM

Re: "GM deserved loss" (Letters, Aug. 6).

Mark Needelman made several unfair assertions about General Motors that are not supported by the facts.

By any measure GM is building vehicles that are highly competitive in the global marketplace. GM's sales are growing rapidly in many important markets around the world, including China, Russia, Brazil and others.

We've introduced new vehicles that are winning over customers and critics alike. Our record over the last few years has been outstanding. Both the Aura and the Malibu were selected as North American Car of the Year, and the Cadillac CTS won Motor Trend Car of the Year.

GM offers eight different hybrid vehicles in the market today, and is a global leader in the development of alternative fuel vehicles, particularly plug-in electric vehicles. We are committed to producing the Chevy Volt, a plug-in electric vehicle that will deliver 64 kilometres of gasoline-free driving and a total range of about 640 kilometres using a small gasoline engine to recharge its electric battery.
